Traveling the Interstate 80 corridor through southern Wyoming is like traveling back through time.

You're following trade routes used by Plains and Great Basin Indians; trails made by wagons on the way to Oregon, California, and Utah; the hoof prints of Pony Express riders and the wheels of the Overland stagecoaches; the iron rails of the Union Pacific, the country's first rail line linking East and West; and tire tracks on the Lincoln Highway, the nation's first coast-to-coast automobile route.

Along the way, you'll see traces of all these historic trails and tracks. You'll see the cities and towns that sprang up beside them. At our historic sites and museums, you'll meet coal miners and oil workers, shepherders and cowboys, soldiers and homesteaders. And you'll discover that some of the great characters of the West - like mountain man Jim Bridger and outlaw Butch Cassidy - left their own tracks on the land.

Buckle up! You're traveling back through time on this ride!
